Copyright Policy & Reporting

Policy version: 23 October 2026 | Effective when first published at www.plugg.site

01 Purpose and operator

Plugg is a music streaming and discovery platform operated by Atedo under the direction of Pirwoth Samuel, based in Pakwach, Uganda. This Copyright Policy explains how we protect music and creative work, what rights uploaders must hold, and how suspected infringement can be reported and addressed.

This policy applies to Guests, Listeners, Artists and any other person submitting a copyright complaint. It supplements the Plugg Terms & Conditions and Privacy Policy. If a provision conflicts with applicable law or a valid, separately executed licensing agreement, the law and relevant valid agreement take precedence.

02 Who owns the music?

Artists, composers, producers, performers, record labels and other rightful owners keep the rights they hold in their creative work. Plugg does not take ownership of a song merely because an Artist registers, uploads a file or creates a public profile.

A single release can involve separate rights in the musical composition and lyrics, sound recording (master), performances, samples, beats, cover artwork and other materials. Permission from one contributor does not necessarily clear every right.

03 Permitted listening and sharing

Guests and registered users may stream music that Plugg lawfully makes available through the intended player and share links to public Plugg pages.

Unless the relevant rights holder has authorized it or the law permits it, users must not rip, download, copy, distribute, sell, re-upload, sample, publicly perform or commercially exploit protected recordings outside the permitted streaming experience. Attempts to bypass protective controls or reproduce content without authority are prohibited.

04 What Artists must confirm before upload

An Artist must have the legal authority to submit a release and make it available under the necessary rights arrangements. This includes clearing any third-party beats, samples, lyrics, instrumentals, recordings, artwork and contributions; obtaining collaborator permissions; and providing truthful credits and metadata.

Uploading a cover song, remix, DJ mix, sampled recording or licensed beat does not automatically make it lawful to stream. Artists must hold permissions covering Plugg's intended uses and must promptly respond if Plugg requests evidence of those permissions.

Artists must not impersonate another creator, upload stolen works, misstate ownership, or manipulate streams and chart activity.

05 Licensing music for streaming

Accepting the website Terms at signup confirms acceptance of account and conduct rules; it does not, by itself, replace a copyright exploitation agreement where Ugandan law requires a written contract or other formalities.

Before Plugg distributes or publicly streams an uploaded release, the relevant parties must have the necessary valid authorizations and any required written, signed and registered licensing documents. Such agreements should identify the works and rights, type and scope of permitted uses, territory, duration, duties, remuneration and method of payment, and conditions for ending or withdrawing rights.

At launch, Plugg offers free public streaming and does not offer in-platform subscriptions, advertising payments or Artist royalty payouts. The absence of an in-app payout feature does not remove any remuneration or licensing obligations imposed by law or applicable rights agreements. Plugg must resolve such obligations before making the affected music available.

06 Upload checks and removal powers

Plugg does not intend to require routine manual administrator approval for every eligible upload. The platform may use technical file checks, metadata requirements and uploader declarations, but these do not guarantee copyright clearance.

Plugg may suspend publication, block streaming, disable a track, ask for evidence of rights, remove disputed content or restrict an account if there is a reasonable rights concern, credible complaint, valid legal notice or other legal requirement.

Automated publication is not permission to infringe another person's rights. Plugg may apply checks or restrictions after a release becomes visible.

07 Reporting a possible infringement

If you own rights in a work, or are authorized to act for the owner, send an email to support@plugg.site with the subject Copyright Complaint - Plugg. You may also report impersonation, unauthorized use of artwork or misleading ownership claims.

Include: (1) your full name and reply email; (2) the work claimed to be protected; (3) the specific Plugg URL, release or Artist profile; (4) the rights you hold or represent; (5) a description of the alleged infringement; (6) relevant evidence or supporting documentation; and (7) a good-faith confirmation that the information you provide is accurate.

If you hold a copyright registration certificate, include it where relevant. Plugg may request additional documentation or identity checks. Ordinary user complaints are not automatically the same as a formal statutory notice; notices under applicable Ugandan law must satisfy the relevant legal requirements.

08 How we handle complaints

We review reports according to their detail, credibility, urgency and applicable legal requirements. Depending on the circumstances, we may request further evidence, restrict access during investigation, contact the uploader, preserve necessary records, remove content or direct the parties to an appropriate authority.

Where the law requires blocking, take-down or other action, Plugg will follow the applicable requirements. We do not guarantee that every complaint will result in a removal, nor do we commit to an arbitrary fixed response period in this policy.

We may take action without advance notice to the uploader when necessary to comply with the law, protect rights or prevent further harm.

09 If your music was reported or removed

An Artist may request review by emailing support@plugg.site with the subject Copyright Review - Plugg, identifying the release and explaining why the content is authorized. Include relevant contracts, licences, original project files, credits, or other supporting evidence as appropriate.

We may contact the complainant, maintain the restriction while checking the evidence or restore the release when we are satisfied that restoration is lawful and appropriate. A request for review does not require Plugg to restore a disputed recording where a valid legal order or outstanding rights restriction applies.

10 Repeat violations and false reports

Plugg may warn, restrict or suspend upload privileges or accounts involved in repeated or serious copyright violations, impersonation, fraudulent releases or manipulation of the complaint process.

Users must not knowingly submit false or misleading infringement claims. We may decline unsupported requests and take proportionate action against misuse of reporting tools.

11 Privacy, records and user data

Plugg uses information supplied in copyright complaints to assess rights claims, contact relevant parties, keep necessary records and comply with legal obligations. We may disclose relevant information to the uploader, involved rights holders, service providers or competent authorities where lawful and necessary.

Private Listener profiles and individual listening histories are not made public through copyright reporting. Personal data is handled in accordance with the Plugg Privacy Policy and applicable law.

12 Changes, contact and applicable law

This policy takes effect when first published at www.plugg.site and may be updated as Plugg develops or legal requirements change. Material changes will be communicated where appropriate.

This policy is intended to operate in accordance with Ugandan law, including the Copyright and Neighbouring Rights Act, Cap. 222, as amended in 2026, and relevant electronic transactions law. It is not a substitute for a court, Registrar or other competent authority's decision.
